OPENING LETTER FROM OUR CHAIRMAN
BIENNIAL REVIEW: 2024–2025

The spirit of our activity rests on a few defining words — the core principles that guided our work in 2024–2025: Journalism, History, Dialogues.

Throughout these two years, we have served as a bridge between the guidance of top experts from Romania, the UK, the USA, Hungary and Poland and a new generation of journalists whom we have supported in their pursuit of excellence and in cultivating an authentic commitment to truth.

Our efforts have contributed to investigations into collapsing town infrastructure, sexual abuse, earthquake readiness, gambling malfeasance, rural healthcare, adoption challenges, and even Russian interference in the Moldovan election. Through this work, new voices have gained visibility, credibility and professional experience.

Participants in our programmes consistently highlight the value of exchanging ideas, contacts and expertise, and of collaborating on investigations. Over time, the programme has grown into a dynamic learning community — one that helps young journalists refine their skills and produce impactful stories, from local inquiries to regional analyses that shape the future of journalism.

With best wishes,

Nicolae Ratiu
Chairman of the Ratiu Family Charitable Foundation

MESSAGE FROM LSE IDEAS

I was delighted that LSE IDEAS partnered with the Rațiu Family Charitable Foundation and the Rațiu Centre for Democracy. Throughout 2024 and 2025, this collaboration strengthened our shared commitment to advancing informed public dialogue, rigorous historical understanding, and the values of open, democratic debate.

During these two years, the Rațiu Forum became a key pillar of our engagement with Central and South-East Europe, offering a unique platform through which scholars, journalists and practitioners exchanged ideas and expertise. The programmes we developed together helped expand knowledge about Romania and its neighbours within the United Kingdom, while also connecting leading Romanian voices with informed perspectives from LSE and other British institutions.

We are proud of the programmes built in 2024 and 2025, and of the meaningful opportunities they created for emerging journalists, researchers and educators across the region.

In 2024 and 2025, our joint work also strengthened regional cooperation, supported academic esearch and academic freedom, and advanced projects rooted in civic engagement and democratic values. Through these initiatives, we helped create spaces where informed debate could flourish, where educators and researchers could collaborate freely, and where the principles of open, democratic societies were actively upheld.

PROGRAMMES

THE RATIU FORUM TEACHING OF HISTORY PROGRAMME

History in its broadest sense is our collective memory — sometimes clear, sometimes obscured or neglected, sometimes contentious, and changing in the light of new learning and shifting public perceptions. It shapes our communities, our states, our solidarities and our enmities. It can inform constructive questioning and a more thoughtful politics — or it can be distorted and weaponised, with profound consequences for our democracies and our security.

11–12 MAY 2024 · RATIU DEMOCRACY CENTRE, TURDA

Teaching Difficult Histories Workshop

25 participants — high-school history teachers and aspiring educators from Romania and Moldova explored the challenges of teaching history beyond the classroom. Led by John Lotherington (21st Century Trust), with Prof. Carol Căpiță, Dr Raul Cârstocea, Prof. James Ker-Lindsay (LSE), Prof. Slobodan Markovich, Ana Radaković, Tim Ryback, Louisa Slavkova, Lidija Suica, Prof. Marko Suica and Dr Eric Weaver.

The programme featured The Christopher Coker Lecture: "Another global authoritarian moment? Culture wars, contemporary populism and the legacy of interwar fascism", alongside sessions on historical consciousness in the digital age, memes and critical thinking, integrating specialised histories into the core curriculum, art as a medium for historical dialogue, and uncovering hidden identities.

It forms part of the Forum's Teaching of History Programme.

9–10 September 2024 · Ratiu Democracy Centre, Turda

The edition brought together prominent academics and policymakers from over 20 institutions across ten countries, including the London School of Economics, King's College London, the University of Oxford and the University of Cambridge. Sessions featured expert analyses of the 2024 U.S. presidential elections and their global implications, rising global pessimism driven by interconnected crises, the growing influence of the Global South, the challenges facing Europe in Ukraine and the Middle East, and the lessons of history regarding war and global order. Key topics included global elections, the rise of populist movements, and the evolving relationship between the United States and Europe.

> "Disenchanted by the progress of democracy, we must realise that elections can sometimes be a sham. People want politicians who speak their minds. In this age, where millions of people have endless options and a cacophony of voices surrounds us, authoritarianism becomes appealing."
